Alibaba's Live-stream of Macy's Draws 100,000 Viewers

By MAGHAN MCDOWELL

Chinese e-commerce retailer Alibaba, known for creating the shopping event surrounding Singles Day, just celebrated American Independence Day — and 100,000 people showed up to watch.

Among the participating retailers was Macy's, which hosted a live-stream shopping tour of its New York flagship on Alibaba's Tmall app. This was the first live video shopping event of this kind, and Alibaba reports that the live-stream attracted 100,000 viewers and 880 comments. Other participating retailers included GNC, Childlife and Puritan's Pride.

The live-stream was an effort to build cross-border cultural education, according to a company spokesman, and included a host providing a tour of the store's floors, a history of the store and old wooden escalators. Unlike other live-streaming sites in China, a company spokesman said, Alibaba's live-streaming platforms are created to serve online shopping and provide practical guidance to shoppers.

While it might seem unexpected that a Chinese retailer would make a major nod to a distinctly American holiday, it was a convenient time to enhance brand-building between Macy's and Alibaba; Macy's had already been selling its products on Alibaba's Tmall platform.

With Macy's recent entry into the China market, Macy's China managing director Dustin Jones said the event would bring “energy, celebration and the experience of the Fourth of July” to Chinese customers. “Through Tmall's live video technology,” he said, “we will introduce Tmall customers to the world's largest store in New York.”
